

Testing

When testing these differences, I did not see any changes in the Chrome browser. This was to be expected, as I use Chrome as my default browser when writing my code. All form elements, colors, fonts, and images appeared as expected. The links all worked correctly, as did the submit form button under the 'Contact' page.

The next browser I tested my site in was Safari. The initial index page appeared the same, with all elements working as expected. However, when I navigated to the contact page, there were a few unsynchronized aspects. The font was not my chosen primary font and the contact webpage screenshot came out wider than the index screenshot.

The final browser I tested out was Firefox. The index page appeared the same as expected, retaining the correct fonts, styles, images, and overall formatting as I had coded. The contact page also appeared the same as I had expected, but after screenshotting and looking at my screen capture within the folder it came out more wide than the other photo.